(without being weird)

SHARING YOUR FAITH WITHOUT BEING WEIRD

If you are a believer, chances are you have compassion for the people you know who don't know Jesus. Your faith in God is a really big deal, but it can be difficult to have spiritual conversations with people who don't know Jesus. As Christians we are called and commanded to share the Good News of Jesus, but how?

First, you don't have to be weird to share your faith. It can become a natural part of conversations and your interactions with other people.

At Crestview, we have an evangelism program that is fit for Middle School students all the way to adults. It is led by our Senior Pastor, Dan Wooldridge on Monday nights from 6pm-8:30pm.

To give you a brief overview, you will be taught how to develop a testimony that you can share easily with anyone. You will also learn how to share the story of Jesus using the fingers of your hand. You will then be given hands-on opportunities as we go out and visit people within the community.

While this may sound a bit scary and overwhelming, once you participate in the classes and go out visiting, it becomes much clearer and easier to do in your daily interactions.

In the Meantime

Talking about God is scary for just about all of us! However, when we commit to praying and serving, God will "show up" and tell us what we need to say. Here are a few things you might talk about:

- Tell your friend that you are a Christian.
- Invite your friend to our weekend service.
- Share something cool that you've learned about God.
- Ask your friend what they think about Jesus.
